

Embrace a NEW ATTITUDE about your health, starting NOW!

The 'Start Small' Approach to Finally Fitting In Fitness

Physical activity is one of those things that everyone thinks about doing, but few people actually do with regularity and, if your busy life transpires against your efforts to get fit, you're not alone. As a nation, we're having trouble 'fitting in fitness'. Statistics estimate that 63% of Canadians are sedentary, or not exercising at an adequate level to maintain health. If you're among them, you likely know what's stopping you. A Health Canada survey reports that individuals between the ages of 18 and 59 list lack of time, energy, and motivation as their top three reasons for not exercising.

No surprise there! Lack of time is the biggest culprit, as our busy schedules transpire against us, and exercise gets put off yet again. Why? Lack of time eats up our motivation and energy. In the daily rush from one commitment to the next, energy drains. As energy approaches nil, the last thing a busy person feels like doing is getting motivated to find time to do physical activity. Since the daily "to do" list is endless, it guarantees that lack of time will always be an issue...and thus the circle remains unbroken. "So, when do I take care of myself?"

The 'All or Nothing' Problem

So many new and unmotivated exercisers wait for inspiration to do it all and do it right, and in the process do nothing. You may have the ambition to reach the next level yet set yourself up for failure by creating unrealistic expectations of yourself and your available time. If you want to exercise but seem to waste time, procrastinate, wait for better circumstances, more time, more energy, or more knowledge, you may be suffering from 'The All or Nothing Exercise Problem'. I'll get to it when...I'll get to it when...I'll get to it when...

How truthful are you about your efforts to realistically fit in fitness? You tell yourself "I'm pumped to lose 20 pounds in 2 months" but your schedule will only realistically allow you to exercise twice a week right now. You say "Well, I'll get up at 5:30am and workout before work." But you know you're not a morning person so it's not likely to bring success. You lament that you used to be so fit without acknowledging that your career has grown and your available time for hanging out at the gym has decreased. You swear you'll do whatever it takes to get back to 'pre-baby' weight, but with two toddlers at home, your time and energy have vanished. As our lives change, we need to adjust with the times – not forever, just for now. Isn't it better that you exercise at least twice a week today rather than waiting to exercise your ideal three to four times later? Isn't 10 minutes of doing better than the hour you were thinking of doing? What would happen if you just got started?

The reality is success in fitness requires some effort from you. The first step to a higher level of personal fitness and health is creating the habit. Whether you're just starting out or working to a new level, set your goals and make a realistic plan for how you will get there based on the available time in your schedule TODAY.

This is a tough one since we're driven by results, and it's true, they're slower to materialize if we're not exercising as much. Even still, we have to habituate exercise before we can build on it. If your busy schedule allows for less exercise than you're used to, then start with less ... just start. If you start small, you'll be less overwhelmed by the changes, and as the exercise habit solidifies, you will find more time, energy, and motivation for the next level.

You must chart your course and follow it – even in small steps – and this will eventually bring you results. Whether you’re exercising, running a business, maintaining a household, raising children, pursuing an education, time issues will prevail, and if you’re one of those people who continues to wait for the more of it to materialize it may be time to change your plan of attack. Remember, you don’t need hours to change the outcome, you just need to get started.

Fitness is indeed a life-long commitment but it needn’t be overwhelming. Plan for three honest exercise efforts each week, then knock them down one at a time. If your schedule allows it, include Monday as your first effort so you experience success (and cross off one exercise effort) early in the week.

Rather than “put it off” until tomorrow, make a decision to use today as an opportunity to “add on” an effort at physical activity.

Remember, don’t overwhelm yourself with the idea that you have to ‘go big’ to make an impact. No matter if you’re starting from scratch or have been moderately active and want to add on a bit more effort, your weekly physical activity goal is still the same ...

...to consistently do more than what is normal for YOU.

If you’re currently not exercising, then more isn’t much. Habituate 10 minutes per day or 30 minutes 3 times per week. If you’re already successful with 2 exercise sessions per week, try to add in a third, or make your current sessions a bit more intense. Add on small bits, get used to the changes they bring on, then add or change again as your body tells you it’s ready. No matter what you decide, simply get started. Before long you will have habituated a new level of health and fitness for yourself, through a ‘start small’ approach that really works!

Michelle Cederberg – “Your ‘Getting to It’ Guru”

Michelle Cederberg leads the industry for life balance, health, and stress management programs, resources, and tools that actually conquer procrastination, fatigue, and loss of motivation. Her expansive education and experience combined with her unique products, platform skills and messaging will ensure individuals and corporations understand that “It’s not the doing that’s tough, it’s GETTING TO IT!” and she helps you figure out how. With a Masters in Kinesiology, a BA in Psychology, and a specialization in Health and Exercise Psychology, Michelle combines mind, body, and practicality to inspire change! She has built her career since 1990, as a college educator, personal trainer, fitness coordinator, author, and business owner. As a professional speaker, she shares her experiences in a humorous and realistic way with delighted audiences across North America. Michelle knows her energy has fueled her business success! Today, through her products and presentations she motivates you to take small steps toward BIG changes, so you can actually GET TO the good things – even with a busy schedule!

To book Michelle to speak at your organization please fill out a booking request at www.michellecederberg.com
Corporate/Group Keynotes and Seminars, Fitness Coaching, Workplace Wellness Consulting

